The Latin American and Caribbean Cultural Society, better known in the United Kingdom as LACCS, is celebrating twenty four years of producing classical guitar and symphonic concerts in London. LACCS is an independent body and non profitable organisation promoting better musical and cultural understanding between all nations. LACCS have presented more than 400 artists in two decades of continued activities. Professor J.R. Monroy, its Chairman, believe that it is particularly through classical and traditional music that the culture heritage of Latin America will be preserved. LACCS had become an international agency, presenting artists from around the world. LACCS is a professional body, that takes pride in the management and production of its activities to attain a high quality finished product.

Comments from the British Press:

"LACCS presented an exotic mix, a treat for London...poetry, films and music... undiluted pleasure..." (The Stage)

"...Organising two concerts on consecutive nights, LACCS could have faced audience problems, I am glad to say that both were equally attended..." (International Classical Guitar)

"...The events mounted by LACCS have appeared to be the only signs of regular public guitar activity in England's capital." (Classical Guitar)

José Antonio

"...Mexican journey...there was much to be said and much to be heard..." (The Times)

"Silvestre Revueltas... concert with assiduous promotion during the preceding weeks..." (The Daily Telegraph)

"One of the greatest pleasures of attending any performance mounted by LACCS is the unexpected delight it provides for those of us unfamiliar with Latin American music..." (Musical Opinion)
